A holistic development approach recognizes that often what matters is not just economic facts, but people's perceptions of these facts. Many of the poor suffer from chronically low self-efficacy. They look around them and see few examples of people like them able to prosper in the conventional ways.

accepted as 'development' in the context of this discussion. This perspective on development is not necessarily related to intentional or 'good' change. Indeed, in some cases development involves decline, crisis and other problematical situations - but all of this can be accommodated within this wide perspective of socio-economic change.

Our capacity to approach the world in a holistic manner can be learned and exercised and this is best done through system thinking (as presented by Peter Senge in his book The Fifth Discipline, 1990). This approach of system thinking has been also presented as the "cornerstone" of a learning organization.
