In other words, the diplomats of the Vienna Congress did not give recognition to any political change that had been made in Europe after 1789. They had firmly determined to take back Europe to the stage which existed before 1789. C.D. Hazen has defined this principle as follows:

What were basic Principles of the Vienna Congress?

What the Congress embodied in its Final Act had already been agreed upon among the powers. The fates of Finland, Norway and Belgium and the states bordering France had already been settled. The major work left to the Congress was to settle the political pattern of the German, Swiss and Italian states and the Polish-Saxon question. The Congress of Vienna restored wherever restoration was possible. It tried to protect Europe against a revival of French imperialism. It provided a guarantee ...
